Dear Jill & Edward – As originally discussed with Michael, there is a need for ground disturbance to be overseen archaeologically (and for any mechanical excavation to use toothless buckets) but will try to pop up later to have a word. If HE say there is the need for a Heritage Statement, then I guess we will need to get one produced…

Looking again at the application & discussing it with Michael, it should be a case of reassuring Historic England that the development proposals will carefully respect the Scheduled Monuments and appropriately monitor the development in case further archaeological features / remains are revealed – OK?

Thanks
Graham
