I would like to object to this application for the following reasons. Firstly it would not be in keeping with the dock area which is trying to maintain its unspoilt quaint charm. There is already an existing sign plain to see directing you to that area which has been there for years. That to increase the number of people could have an adverse effect on the quality of life of local residents as the path and steps are very steep narrow and close to properties. I do not believe that this sign on a national trust building in the centre of this historic fishing village complies with National parks policies ensuring that appearance and the special qualities of the national park are protected which is the core policy of the national park.

I wish to object to this application as I feel a giant mosaic or sign on the side of the lovely national trust building would spoil the the lovely village view and be out of place(there is already a stone sign)i do visit the area often and people do find there own way around without the need to have giant unsightly signs on every corner.The village is lovely as it is and why do people think they need to keep changing it?

I have reviewed the planning application NYM/2020/0056/FL for public information signage in the form of a 6m2 mosaic to be located on the gable end wall of the National Trust Old Coastguard Station in Robin Hood's Bay.

I object to the proposal on two grounds:

- The size and style of both designs are out of keeping with the visual appearance of the area, which is a designated Conservation Area.
- The need for additional signage is questionable.

If the existing sign (white lettering on sandstone as also used elsewhere in the Conservation area) is considered inadequate because it is sometimes obscured, then I propose that it should be replaced by a sign of similar size and design located at the foot of the Covet Hill steps. An alternate design could be white lettering on natural hardwood, which is used throughout the Conservation Area for street signs as well as a few public informational & directional signs.

I would like to object to the proposed sign as there is already a sign there directing people to the Quarterdeck and no need for another.

The sign would look far too obtrusive and out of character in this village and the Quarterdeck already gets a high footfall of visitors.

Would it now be alright for all the other shops/cafe owners to be able to put signs up directing them to their own businesses as Mr Kemp seems to want to do?

I would like to object to the above proposal as there is already a suitable sign plain for people to see. The sign Mr Kemp has proposed is very large and obtrusive and out of character within the village. If everybody who has a business in the village put signs up would it not start to change this quaint village to look like Blackpool?

Dear Sirs,

I wish to object to the above planning application.

The sign is not in keeping with the dock and is detrimental to the visual surroundings of the area.

The village is not in Greece or Italy where mosiacs are common place, it is an old fishing village, Robin Hoods Bay in Yorkshire.

I have lived here for over 20 years and there was a traditional sign on that wall that said, "Covet Hill Steps, access to the quarterdeck and beach"

What has happened to it? and why can it not be reinstated.

Surely that would be in keeping with the traditions of the village.

I hope you will take my objection into consideration before any decision is made.

Kind regards, Graham Irving.

I would like to object to this proposal as i believe to stick a mosaic or sign on the side of this historic building,a building that was restored to look as the original coastguard lookout was in the last century, and next to a listed gable end will spoil the view of the dock area.I would question the need for a second sign pointing to the area as there is clearly a sign already there. Unfortunately people move to old, fishing villages and then moan when there are fishing boats pulled up in storms.Has the national trust actually given permission for this sign?The quarterdeck area is already very well used and to try and direct more people to go up steps and then down very steep steps when they could just go down the slipway to the beach seems daft as some will have wheelchairs,prams,dogs,or children to carry.I would also worry that this sign would set a precedence for more signs by business owners to direct people towards their businesses.One direction sign, I believe is ok but two is one too many.Leave the Bay as it is please.
